PROGRAM NOTES

Dawn's Awakening

Text by James Joseph Burke (1836-1928)

I stood on a hill at daybreak and watched the rising sun.

I saw the night in its passing and the day that had just begun.

I stood on a hill at morningtide and watched the break of day.

I saw the stars in the heavens, as they faded slowly away.

I saw the sun in its splendor rise over the hazy mists,

I felt the warmth of its shining rays, as the earth it fondly kissed.

I saw the sheep and the shepherd rise from a night of repose.

I saw all the beauties of nature and the dew shine like pearls on the rose.

I saw the fields and the forest, I saw the river below, I saw the ships in the harbor, and wondered wither they'd go,

I saw in the distance a city where slumbered the wicked and just.

Close by on the hillside a graveyard where soon must mingle their dust.

I saw the church in the valley where worshipped the old and the young.

And I heard the bells in its tow'r as a heav'nly anthem they sung.

I listened again for the voices that rang in praise of our Lord,

And the hilltops echoed the music with hosannas in sweetest accord.

Sallie Hendrix is a student of Dr. Sarah Hetrick
